

Aurora Cultural Centre exhibit features art by First Nations, Métis women

Aurora Banner

Art created by First Nations and Métis women is in the Aurora Cultural Centre spotlight until June 28.

The exhibit, Indigenesse, is a creative forum for the artists to share their spirits through storytelling, music, workshops and fine art.

The event includes work by national award-winning artists and performers.

Visual art pieces include paintings, fashion, photographs and mixed media.

Newmarket Métis artist Nathalie Bertin came up with the idea for the exhibit, which invites meaningful discussion on the true lives of First Nations and Métis women.

Mayor Geoff Dawe (left) and Fred Exelby view a piece.

Artist Laura Lee K. Harris speaks during the event.

Claire D'Aurore examines the art.

This bear skull is part of the collection.